

Section 810

The Criminal Code of Canada allows a judge or justice of the peace to require you to enter into a recognizance (like a peace bond) if there are reasons to believe you will commit certain serious crimes. Being on a recognizance is like being on probation.

This booklet explains the 810 process, what your rights are and how to get legal help.

Criminal Code Sections

The Criminal Code allows “any person” who has reasonable grounds to fear that someone will commit certain types of offences to start 810 proceedings against the person.

These offences fall into two categories: sexual offences against children under the age of 16 (810.1¹) and serious personal injury offences. Serious personal injury offences include serious offences that involve violence, offences which cause serious psychological harm and sexual offences against adults (810.2²).

The definition of “serious personal injury offences” is in section 752 of the Criminal Code.³

The Referral

In British Columbia, a person who thinks that you are a high risk to offend violently or sexually can report his or her opinion to the High Risk Offender Identification Program (HROIP), the RCMP Behavioural Sciences Group (BSG) or the police department closest to where you live (or are being released).

Referrals can be made by any person and at any time. The notification might come from a probation officer, a community member, a police officer or from the Correctional Service of Canada when you are coming to the end of a sentence in federal custody. People can also be referred when parole is ending, when a period of probation ends or a period of custody in a provincial institution is coming to an end.

Although referrals can happen at any time, most happen when someone is detained to warrant expiry while serving a federal sentence. If you have been detained to warrant expiry and have committed one or more sexual offences or serious personal injury offences, it is likely that you will be considered for an 810 order.

Most 810 proceedings begin when an Institutional Parole Officer (IPO) or other correctional official notifies the HRIOP, the RCMP BSG and the local police department that the detained prisoner is approaching his or her warrant expiry date.

The IPO will send a Warrant Expiry Date package to HROI, BSG and the local police. The concerned person generally contacts the HRIOP 90 days before an individual's release or the end of a period of supervision.

The file is then reviewed by the High Risk Recognizance Advisory Committee (HRRAC). The HRRAC will consider many factors, including:

- your past acts, including criminal convictions;
- which programs and treatment you have received;
and
- recent psychiatric and psychological assessments.

If the HRRAC thinks that you are a high risk to offend either violently or sexually, it will complete the application process and send the file to Crown Counsel.

Crown Counsel

The Provincial Crown must get the approval of the Attorney General to proceed on an 810.2 (fear of violent personal injury offence). The local Crown must get approval from the Regional Crown to proceed on an 810.1 (fear of sexual offence against a child).

If the Attorney General or Regional Crown approves the 810 application, it returns the file to the Crown. The Crown makes an application to a Provincial Court judge for a Warrant and a Spring Order to bring you to court. The Judge issues the Warrant for your arrest and Spring Order to bring you to court.

The Provincial Crown is supposed to send a letter to you to advise you of the process.

The police 810 coordinator will often try to interview you and provide you with information about the process. He or she might try to convince you to agree to enter into the 810 recognizance.

You do not have to consent to this interview and you do not have to agree to the recognizance.

The Court Process

You will likely be brought into court before your warrant expiry date. You will be given the option of either entering into the recognizance or setting it for hearing.

If you do not have your own lawyer, Duty Counsel will be at the courthouse and might be able to advise you about the 810 process. Duty Counsel will also be able to assist you in court for the bail hearing or if you want to enter the recognizance.

If you decide not to willingly enter the recognizance, Crown will consent to your release on bail but will ask the judge to impose conditions.

The Crown might ask the judge to impose conditions including conditions relating to residency, weapons, and contact with children or previous victims of offences. The Crown may ask for a curfew and a condition that the person not drink or take non-prescribed drugs.

If there are psychological or psychiatric assessments in your correctional file, the Crown will likely have them. The Crown will consider things like the details of your present and past convictions to decide which conditions they will ask the judge to impose.

The Crown will also likely ask the judge to order you to report to a bail supervisor and to the police 810 coordinator. The Criminal Code says the judge should consider whether it is a good idea to have you report to the correctional authority (probation) or to the police.

If you are the subject of an 810.1 or 810.2 Information, you will have a bail hearing. You or your lawyer (or Duty Counsel) can tell the judge if you agree to certain conditions or why some conditions that Crown wants are not appropriate. You do not have to consent to these conditions. It will be up to the judge who hears the bail application to decide what conditions are necessary.

The Hearing

If you do not want to enter the recognizance, you can set a hearing date. At the hearing, Crown will have to prove that there are reasonable grounds to fear you will commit one of the listed offences. If you decide that you want to have a hearing, you might remain on bail for a considerable period of time (often many months) until your hearing date.

The hearing itself can take several days. The Crown must prove to the judge that there are reasonable grounds to fear that you will commit either a violent personal injury offence (810.2) or a sexual offence against a person under the age of 16 (810.1). The Crown must only prove this on a “balance of probabilities”. This is a lower standard than “beyond a reasonable doubt” (the standard in a criminal trial) which is easier to prove.

At the hearing, the Crown will give the court evidence about your past acts, rehabilitation and treatment, and recent psychiatric or psychological assessments. The Crown will likely call as witnesses IPOs, other correctional officers, and psychiatrists and psychologists who have assessed you.

You or your lawyer will be able to question these witnesses and also call your own witnesses.

If the judge finds at the end of the hearing that there are reasonable grounds to fear that you will commit either a violent personal injury offence or a sexual offence against a child, the judge will order you to enter into a recognizance. This is not a criminal conviction.

If the judge orders you to enter a peace bond and you refuse to enter into it, the judge can order you to serve a prison term of up to 12 months.

The 810 Recognizance

If the court decides there are “reasonable grounds” after a hearing, or if you decide to enter into an 810 recognizance at any point, the judge will decide how long that recognizance will be.

The recognizance is usually for a period of up to 12 months but if you have a previous conviction for a sexual offence against a child, the judge may order that you enter into a recognizance of up to two years.

The Provincial Court judge may add “any reasonable conditions” to the recognizance that the judge thinks will ensure your “good conduct”.

Conditions can include:

- that you participate in treatment;
- that you wear an electronic monitoring device (but only if the Attorney General requests this);
- that you are restricted to a particular geographic area unless you have written permission to leave;
- that you have a curfew or be under house arrest;
- that you not consume alcohol or drugs; and
- that you not be allowed to own weapons.

If a recognizance is ordered because there is a fear of sexual offences against children, the conditions can include:

- that you are prohibited from doing anything that would bring you into contact with people under 16, including using a computer to communicate with people under 16; and
- that you are not allowed to attend any public park, public swimming area, daycare centre, school ground or playground.

The judge must also decide whether you should report either to probation services or the police. The Crown usually asks the court to order you to report to both authorities.

The Crown regularly asks for a condition that you participate in assessments. It is a good idea to seek legal advice about this sort of condition because it could make it easier for Crown to seek another 810 recognizance in the future.

You or your lawyer can try to convince the judge not to impose certain conditions. You do not have to consent to the conditions that the Crown requests. The judge will decide which conditions are reasonable.

Breaches of 810 Recognizances

Failing to comply with the conditions of the recognizance is called a “breach of recognizance”.

The Crown in British Columbia treats breaches of 810 recognizances (s.811) and breaches of bail on 810 recognizances very seriously. The Crown almost always proceeds by indictment on these breaches which means they can ask the judge to sentence you to a period of up to two years in jail. The judge can also impose probation for up to three years.

The Crown in British Columbia usually asks the judge for sentences over three months for breaches and will ask for longer and longer jail periods for second and subsequent breaches. It is not unusual for Crown to ask for sentences of twelve months or more in jail. The Crown regularly asks for a period of probation of three years to be attached to the sentence.

The Crown will ask that all of the conditions of the original 810 be a part of the probation period. This means that if you breach a one year 810 recognizance, you might end up on those same conditions for another 3 years.

It is important to consider the consequences of a breach when deciding whether or not to agree to enter into an or 810.2 recognizance.

A breach of a recognizance is a criminal conviction.

Legal Aid Coverage

Legal aid will generally provide coverage for the 810 applications described in this pamphlet. However, they usually do not provide coverage for ordinary peace bonds. If you are approaching your warrant expiry date (or your parole or probation is ending) and you are told that section 810 proceedings are being started against you, contact Legal Aid.

When speaking with Legal Aid, make sure that you tell them you are seeking coverage for an 810 order under either section 810.01, 810.1 or 810.2.

If you are accused of breaching your bail before your 810 hearing, or you are accused of breaching an 810 recognizance, Legal Aid will often cover the charge.

Endnotes

¹ 810.1 C.C.C. (sexual offences against children)

Any person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person will commit an offence under section 151, 155 or 159, subsection 160 (2) or (3), section 163.1, 170, 171, 172.1, subsection 173 (2) or section 271, 272 or 273 in respect of one or more persons who are under the age of sixteen years, may lay an information before a provincial court judge, whether or not the person or persons in respect of whom it is feared that the offence will be committed are named.

² 810.2 C.C.C. (violent personal injury offences)

Any person who fears on reasonable grounds that another person will commit a serious personal injury offence, as that expression is defined in section 752, may, with the consent of the Attorney General, lay an information before a provincial court judge, whether or not that person or persons in respect of whom it is feared that the offence will be committed are named.

³ 752 C.C.C. (serious personal injury offence)

“Serious personal injury offence” means:

(a) an indictable offence, other than high treason, treason, first degree murder or second degree murder, involving;

(i) the use or attempted use of violence against another person, or;

(ii) conduct endangering or likely to endanger the life or safety of another person or inflicting or likely to inflict severe psychological damage upon another person and for which the offender may be sentenced to imprisonment for ten years or more, or

(b) an offence or attempt to commit an offence mentioned in section 271 (sexual assault), 272 (sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm) or 273 (aggravated sexual assault).

Prisoners' Legal Services

Unfortunately, Prisoners' Legal Services is not funded to provide legal representation for 810 issues.

If you are a prisoner in British Columbia, you can contact Prisoners' Legal Services for advice or assistance with issues that affect your liberty or about health care or human rights issues. For assistance from Prisoners' Legal Services, you must have a referral from the Legal Services Society. Contact their call centre at 604-681-9736. Once you have a referral, you can call Prisoners' Legal Services directly at 604-636-0464 (if you are in a provincial jail) or 1-866-577-5245 (if you are in a federal prison).

This publication contains general information only.
Each situation is unique. The law can also change.
If you have a legal problem, contact Prisoners'
Legal Services or a lawyer.

Produced by Prisoners' Legal Services with funding from the Law Foundation of British Columbia.

A project of the West Coast
Prison Justice Society

October 2015

